Greenridge provides townhouses situated to low income working families in South San Francisco. Situated on the site of the former McLellan Nursery, Greenridge was built to include affordable housing among neighboring market-rate developments in the city.

Each townhouse unit has a private entry and a private patio area. The eight residential buildings are grouped around attractive greenery and landscape architecture that complements the community aesthetic. The common areas include two courtyards, a children’s play area, a community room and a computer lab. A stairway connects Greenridge with a park and nearby public schools. The site offers views of nearby hills, and is located across the street from a BART station and major shopping facilities.
